

The Unveiling

As time continues to take its course here on planet Earth, our collective consciousness within our physical reality remains conditioned, separate, and trapped in a state of fear and confusion. In essence, we have been taught specific thought patterns that prevent us from understanding our true potential as human beings.

From a young age we learn to see the world from a very narrow perspective, one that prevents us from seeing our own true inherent values as human beings, and from seeing the value in those around us. These thought patterns are deeply ingrained in the way that we perceive the world and cause us to see differences in human value based on race, sex, appearance, and social class.

These patterns of thinking also cause us to see ourselves as separate from our communities, creating an egocentric core value system in which we are not working together to empower the community as a whole, but are only looking out for ourselves. We believe that success is in limited supply, therefore, in order to succeed we must compete against one another to get to the top.

We have been conditioned to forget that we are all connected, that we are always affecting one another, and that we have the potential to work together to empower one another in a society in which we all prosper together. This infrastructure of our society has been gradually developed by a worldwide organization that we know as the 1%, Illuminati, or whatever high council name you may have heard.

The 1st amendment, freedom of speech, promotes a great deal of confusion because it allows for information to be placed into our collective reality with no regard for truth or objectivity. In other words, we have the freedom to speak freely, but this leaves room for manipulation. The conditioning goes so deep into the way that our minds function that in reality we are not free. This belief that we are free also causes a lack of questioning the system. These higher conglomerates have created a vision of how society experiences emotions and reality, and have manifested this vision by creating an infrastructure that supports it.

Energy generates into our reality in a collection of individual, but deeply connected, entities that we know as plants, animals, and of course humans. Humans have been given a rare state of existence that allows us to create opportunities through free will. Free will is our freedom to make our own decisions and create our realities working in conjunction with the laws of the universe.

Humans, for the last couple thousand years, have used this free will energy to create a hierarchy that drives humanity into social classes, placing different levels of value on each individual. This creates a perceived separation of human beings on a massive scale when in reality, all human beings are connected to one another. It's important for us to remember that the true, inherent value of all human beings is unconditional and is not dependent on these categories that we have created to separate ourselves from one another.

We have been conditioned from a very young age, especially in the United States, to believe that we are here to compete with our peers in order to separate the educated and the sharp from the hard-working and ignorant. As we grow up through our education system, we are judged and categorized. By the time we reach high school, most individuals have a pretty good idea of whether or not they are on the track to higher education based on how they were categorized throughout the school systems. The real question is: how do we continue to place these values on our community members and allow them to dictate the way we treat each other?

In some cases, we are taught to take pride in our heritage and beliefs, and in other cases, we are taught to be ashamed of our culture, that we are inherently less valuable as human beings because of it. Politics, entertainment, sports, education, and religion are other tools that are used to program us to believe that each person will fall into a faction or category that is judged through their actions and their appearance. Separation is a natural occurrence that as a collective we do not grasp, yet it is simply due to over and under valuing of who is better and worse.

We are now going to break down how our society influences and manipulates how we create our collective reality through the fundamentals of energy. Understanding that this is our perspective of how energy is being misused, we do not place blame on any particular group of people because all of us are expanding our awareness every day, and we can emphasize with individuals on all levels of awareness. We are all a part of this society together and, therefore, we all have a responsibility to create something that is more productive together, rather than placing blame on one group of people and initiating even more separation.

In order to create collective change, we must step outside of our comfort zones. To step outside of our comfort zones, we must chisel away at our fear of being judged by those around us. This is because the steps that must be taken in order for change to occur will be outside of what is commonly accepted as the societal norm.

I Am Love

Our challenge here on Earth is to reveal who we are. By doing that, comfort zones will have no choice but to break. The program that needs to be broken is the desire to focus outside of ourselves, because in truth, the main focus is ourselves.

Our reality is set up in a way that influences us to find outlets outside of ourselves to grab onto and direct us away from truly understanding who we are. We latch onto these outlets and then become dependent on the energy that they give us. We must focus on attaching to our energy and gaining strength from inside of ourselves and not allowing outside influences to continue to dictate who we are and who we become.

We must learn to cultivate relationships of love with ourselves, to truly comprehend our value as human beings and, from there, create the life that we choose through self-discipline and working with the laws of the universe.

Self-reflection is a huge medium through which we can begin to cultivate this. We must question our thought patterns, continuously asking ourselves why we are thinking the way that we are thinking. From there, we can start to unmask ourselves from these layers that we have developed, revealing our true selves, untainted by these unproductive thought patterns that teach us to hate ourselves and to hate those around us. Once we do this, we can begin to see clearly, see our own values and see the value in all human beings on this planet.
